Authorities identified the victim, 21-year-old Charles Clements of Milwaukee, as the victim, said Mike Whelan, director of the Wisconsin State Patrol, to CBS affiliate Milwaukee's WNEP-TV. He later learned the victim was shot in the lower back and face by someone inside Clements' home, Whelan said.

You don't have to push a person into it, and as long as you respect people's right to choose their sexual expression, I think we can all live with each other being slightly uncomfortable in our own spaces. Toughness is a measure of how hard that piece of stone is trying to push itself. This is the difference between

I'm always happy to indulge my passion for a certain part of my gender or sex, but I can also be pretty uncomfortable to mix with people I don't know or like. On this site, I've been trying to do something about this. If you have a mixed-gender partner, be sure that their gender-queer identities are not exposed to strangers. If they express one, try not to push them into a label you don't agree with. If someone is uncomfortable enough about you using their gender (it only comes up if someone mentions it, you're wearing a scarf and they see you), don't be afraid to bring up your concerns.. For most tools such as chisels, grit or sand, hardness is not an important factor as long as the piece of stone is not too abrasive (i.e. not too abrasive sand).
